MONEYMORE, COAGH AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

MONEYMORE is a market town, partly in the parish of Desertlyn, but chiefly in that of Ardree, barony of Loughinsholin, county of Londonderry, 109 miles N. by W. from Dublin, 86 W. S. W. from Belfast, 38 S. E. from Londonderry, 31 S. from Coleraine, the same distance N. from Armagh, 19 S. E. from Dungiven, 10 S. by E. from Maghera, 81 N. from Stewartstown, 6
W. S. W. from Ballyronan (on Lough Neagh), and 44 N. E. from Cookstown; situated on the mail road from Armagh to Coleraine. This place, which is one of the oldest post towns in the county, is noticed in Pymar's Survey, as 'consisting of an ancient castle, a fine old building, and six good houses of stone and lime.' Cormick O'Hagan, a follower of Sir Phelim O'Neil, took the castle by stratagem, in 1611, and it was pulled down about 1760. The town consists of two principal and five smaller streets, the houses of which are well built, and the place exhibits a character of neatness and comfort. The town, and a large tract of adjacent country, are the property of the Drapers' Company, London, who have greatly improved the town and district. They have planted eight hundred statute acres; completed more than fifty Irish miles of good road, at their own expense; constructed bridges, erected places of worship, and founded schools on different parts of their estate; thus conferring a vast amount of benefit on the labouring population, and contributing greatly to the general comfort of their own tenantry. The linen manufacture is carried on extensively in both the town and the circumjacent country; and at the markets and fairs considerable quantities of linen, corn, and butter, are sent to Ballyronan, and there shipped for conveyance up Lough Neagh, and along its connected lines of navigation. The market house, the court house, the linen hall, and its principal inn, are at once ornamental to the town, and would do credit to one of much greater magnitude—the last-named, the Drapers' Arms Hotel, is in every respect an excellent house. Petty sessions are held on alternate Tuesdays, and a court for the manor, monthly—the latter, which is coextensive, with the whole estates belonging to the company, so often mentioned, comprises sixty-four townlands.

The parish church of Desertlyn, adjoining the town, is a very elegant structure in the Norman style, erected in 1832, at an expense of £6,000., wholly defrayed by
