CASHEL,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF GOLDEN AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CASHEL is an ancient episcopal city, in the barony of Middlethird, county of Tipperary, 96 miles S.W. from Dublin, 15 N.W. from Clonmel, and 11 N.E. from Tipperary; eligibly situated at the diverge of several main roads leading into the circumjacent counties and many important towns, and is the terminus of the Dublin and Cashel railway. The see of Cashel, now united with those of Enly, Waterford, and Lismore, was either founded or restored at the beginning of the tenth century. The first Bishop of Cashel, of whom any authentic notice occurs, is Cormac Mac-Cullinan, King of Munster, who, as was not uncommon at that period, exercised also spiritual jurisdiction over his subjects. The city consists chiefly of five streets, with some diverging lanes and outlets—Main-street (so called) being the principal thoroughfare of business, which is strictly of a local and retail nature. The city is well supplied with pure water from springs two miles distant, and conveyed into a large stone cistern in the town. It is also about to be lighted with gas. In 1216 Cashel was erected into a borough by Archbishop Donat, and in 1220 Archbishop Marian extended the privileges of the burghesses. Richard II, Elizabeth, Charles I, James II, and Charles II confirmed preceding charters, or granted new ones, until, in the 9th of George IV, the property of the corporation was vested in commissioners, together with the municipal affairs of the city. General sessions for the county are held in January and July, and petty sessions for the division every Wednesday. The tholsel court is still in existence; but there are very few causes now referred to its decision. The city returned two members to the Irish parliament until the Union, since which it has sent one to the Imperial legislature; the present representative is Joseph Stock, Esq. L.L.D. A branch of the National Bank of England is established here. The principal hotel is 'Ryall's,' in Bank-place, an admirably conducted house for the comfort of families and commercial gentlemen. Cashel is the head quarters of a constabulary district, comprising six stations.

The old cathedral of St. Patrick, the ruins of which testify its extent and former magnificence, boldly towers on the celebrated rock of Cashel; and adjoining are the remains of Cormac's Chapel, erected by Cashel's first bishop, and who, it is conjectured, erected also the round tower which crowns the summit of the rock. Archbishop Price, in the present century, ruthlessly unroofed the ancient and venerable cathedral, and thereby hastened its decay. The cathedral and parochial church of St. John, erected on the site of the former edifice, was first opened for divine service in December, 1783; it is a handsome and spacious stone structure, with a lofty spire of good proportions. The Roman Catholic chapel of St. John, in Friar-street, is a spacious and elegant edifice; behind it is a convent of nuns of the Presentation order. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, a handsome building in Main-street. The bishop's palace, now the Deanery House, a spacious mansion with gardens, in the centre of the town, have been lately purchased by the dean and chapter, as a residence for the dean, and minister officiating at the cathedral. The diocesan library, consisting of eight thousand volumes, is deposited in a handsome stone building in the cathedral yard; the Rev. George Lawless is the librarian. The South Tipperary library is a recent establishment, under the direction of a patron and a limited number of subscribers. There are besides reading and news rooms in the market-hall, and billiard rooms in Main-street. The charitable institutions comprise some valuable endowed schools, both for Protestant and Roman Catholic children of either sex; a handsome national school, with a classical academy attached; a lying-in hospital, a dispensary, &c. Races are held several times a year, but the principal meeting is on the 29th of September. For the enjoyment of persons possessing a morbid taste for sports of the kind, a subscription pack of hounds, hunted in the season, affords the necessary gratification to such. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday, and the chartered fairs March 26th and April 7th. Customary fairs are also held on the third Tuesday in every month, unless the dates should interfere with those of the chartered fairs. The population of Cashel, in 1841, was 7,036.

GOLDEN is a neat and thriving village, in the parish of Relickmurry, barony of Clanwilliam, same county as Cashel, about four miles west therefrom; situated on the banks of the Suir, on the road to Tipperary, in what is called the 'Golden Vale.' The village consists of one long street, divided by the river, which is crossed by an ancient stone bridge, on which King William signed the charter of Cashel; and near it is an old circular tower. Petty sessions are held once a fortnight in the village, which is a station of the constabulary force. A church of the establishment and a Roman Catholic chapel are the places of worship, and a national school is the principal public institution. Fairs, May 18th, Aug. 26th, October 26th, and December 15th. The parish of Relickmurry contained, in 1841, 5,431 inhabitants, and Golden Village 602 of that number.
