

CLOYNE AND CASTLE-MARTYR.

CLOYNE is a market town and parish, and the seat of a diocese, in the barony of Imokilly, county of Cork, 159 miles s. from Dublin, and 18 s.e. from Cork; situated on the road between Youghal and Cork Harbour, about four miles from the sea coast. The See of Cloyne, whose bishop was a suffragan of the Archbishop of Cashel, was founded in the sixth century, and is solely in the county of Cork. In the year 1430 it was united to Cork, but since the year 1638 it was governed by its own bishop, and constituted an independent See; on the death of the late bishop, in 1835, it was again united to Cork, as it now is. With the exception of large quantities of boots and shoes made here, the trade of the place is very inconsiderable. The cathedral is a venerable cruciform, inelegant structure, one hundred and twenty feet long, having lateral aisles, divided by Gothic arches; it is kept in excellent repair, and contains several ancient monuments of the Thomonds, Longuevilles, and Forsters. In the churchyard are interred the remains of a person named Upton, who died at the advanced age of 101; and this is not the only instance of such surprising longevity. The Bishop's Palace (now called Cloyne House) is a large and commodious building, occupied by a private gentleman. The Roman Catholic chapel is a plain and spacious structure. There is a charity school for educating, clothing, and maintaining eight boys, which is supported by a bequest of Dr. Crow; and there are other public schools, and a dispensary supported in the town. Adjoining the cathedral is a pleasingly-planted cemetery, within which are the remains of an ancient building, conjectured to be the original church of Cloyne. Beyond the enclosure is a round tower, ten feet in diameter and ninety feet high. In 1749 this tower was damaged by lightning, and a bell which was within it was thrown down. About a mile and a half from Cloyne is Castle Mary, the beautiful residence of M. Longfield, Esq.; Rostellan Castle, the seat of the Marquess of Thomond (resident in England); and Ballinaloe Castle, the seat of John Litchfield, Esq. The market, which is very large, is held on Thursday. Fairs, February 24th, Tuesdays in Easter and Whitsun weeks, September 12th, and December 5th. The parish of Cloyne contained, in 1841, 6,726 inhabitants, including 2,200 for the town.

CASTLE-MARTYR is a small market town (formerly a parliamentary borough), partly in the parishes of Itermorrone, Ballyoughera, and Mogeely, same county as Cloyne, between four and five miles n.e. from that town; chiefly to be noticed as containing the residence of the Earl of Shannon, who has a noble seat here, which is approached from the Middleton road by a magnificent avenue of lofty elms, one mile in length. This place was formerly the residence of a branch of the Fitzgeralds; was incorporated in the year 1663, through the influence of the first Earl of Orrery, and it gives the title of Baron to a branch of the noble family of Boyle. The only place of worship in the town is the parish church; but there are several Roman Catholic chapels in the neighbouring hamlets, together with a number of schools, a fever hospital, and a dispensary. The scenery in the neighbourhood is particularly fine, and the land around is in a good state of cultivation. The market is held on Saturday. Fairs, May 2nd, July 19th, October 2nd, and December 19th. Population of the town about 1,400.
