

KILWORTH,

A SMALL market town, in the parish of its name, barony of Condons and Clongibbons, county of Cork, is 133 miles s.w. from Dublin, 25 N.E. from Cork, and between three and four miles N. from Fermoy; pleasantly situated on the river Funchoon, over which is a neat stone bridge of six arches, about a mile above its confluence with the Blackwater. Mills for dressing flax were, some years since, erected by the Earl of Mountcashel for the advantage of the industrious poor; they are now converted, or about to be, into grist or flour mills. Moor Park, the seat of the nobleman just mentioned, is a beautiful and well-wooded demesne, on the right bank of the river; the mansion, which commands some delightful scenery, is a noble and spacious building. Castle Cloughleagh, also seated on the banks of the Funchoon, affords some fine prospects from its lofty tower. In the turbulent periods with which this kingdom was afflicted, it withstood the assaults of Cromwell, to whom it subsequently surrendered. The market-house and manor court-house of Fleetwood are situated in the centre of the town.

very of wages and settling petty feuds: William Page, Esq. is the seneschal. The Crown Inn here is a very admirably conducted house. The nursery-grounds of Messrs. Armor and Sons are extensive, delightfully laid ral productions.

The parish church of Kilworth union is an ancient structure, with a tower, the latter raised in 1742. The Roman Catholic chapel, situated a short distance from the town, is a spacious and convenient edifice. A national school, near the chapel, a parochial school (within the parish) supported by a bequest of the late Hon. and Rev. Robert Moore, and the present incumbent, the Rev. Thomas Newenham, afford gratuitous instruction to numerous children. The market (of little note) is

KINSALE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF COVE AND SCILLY.

KINSALE is a sea-port, parliamentary borough, and market town, in the parishes of Saint Maltose and Ringcurran, barony of Kinsale, county of Cork, 172 miles s.w. from Dublin, 124 s. from Cork, and 11 s.e. from Bandon; eligibly situated near the mouth of the river Bandon or Glasson, (as it was formerly called), which here forms a capacious and secure harbour, accessible in nearly all weathers, and navigable for vessels of any tonnage. The origin of this place, from its great antiquity, is but imperfectly known, and the deviation of its name is compassed by doubt. Cean Taille, signifying in Irish the 'Headland in the Sea,' is said to be its ancient appellation: it is also in some MSS. of a very early date called Fan-na-Thaibrid, or 'the fall of the Springs'. It was for several centuries the most important sea-port on the southern coast of Ireland, and consequently has sustained many fierce sieges. In the reign of Charles II, in 1670, the Earl of Orrery began a regular fort, to which the Duke of Ormonde gave the name of Castle Fort; this was finished at an expense of £70,000. It stands at some distance below the town, is very strong, and completely commands the harbour, as ships must pass it within pistol shot.
This fort and a commodious barrack near the town are capable of containing 2,000 men. When James II. came over to Ireland from France, he landed at this port on the 12th March, 1688; but, notwithstanding the strength of the works, in the autumn of 1690, it was reduced by the Earl of Marlborough, who took the old fort by storm, the Irish governor being killed in the breach. The ruins of the old fort now form a very picturesque appearance from the public walks about the town. The streets rise in a singular and irregular manner, on the acclivity of an eminence called Compass-hill, the houses ranging tier above tier, many of them on sites excavated in the solid rock, while others are perched on the level of some projecting crag: the descent is exceedingly precipitous, and the dwellings are inaccessible to carriages, except from the summit of the hill or from the Main-street, which takes a circuitous course along the shore of the harbour.
Near the centre of the town, on an elevated situation, are assembly, reading, and news rooms, and a beautiful public walk called the Bowling Green, ornamented with trees, and commanding a delightful view of the harbour and villages of Cove and Scilly. There are baths, both hot and cold, and an excellent hotel—the latter the 'Royal George,' situated on Long-quay.
These attractions, together with the salubrity of the air, the cheapness of provisions, and the agreeable society which the place affords, render it, as it is, a place of fashionable resort during the summer months.
The other public buildings, exclusive of those for divine worship, are the town-hall and gaol, a barrack for infantry, a union workhouse, a fever hospital and dispensary, and some public schools.

The port is too near Cork and Cove to possess a great amount of trade, but there are some establishments among the merchants and shipowners here of the first respectability and substance. The butter trade is one of some importance; malting is carried on to a good extent; there is a considerable brewery, and the 'Inchy Mills' and 'Brown's Mills' for corn are large and powerful. The fishery is productive, and the fishermen are deemed the most expert of any in Ireland. Lobsters and oysters are taken here in abundance; the produce of the fishery is about £500. weekly. The exports of the port consist chiefly in agricultural produce; the imports comprise timber from British America, and coal, iron, and salt from England and Wales. Kinsale received various grants and franchises from many of the monarchs of England, and some of the charters bestowed extensive judicial powers, all which have been either abrogated by, or merged in the Municipal Act for Ireland, passed in the 9th of George IV, which vested the government of the borough in certain commissioners appointed for that purpose, and for paving and cleansing the town. From an early date the borough was represented in the Irish parliament, to the time of the Union, by two representatives, since which period it has returned only one to the Imperial parliament; the present member is William Henry Watson, of Wilton Crescent, London, Esquire. Kinsale confers the title of Baron on the ancient and noble family of De Courcy—the premier Baron of Ireland.

The parish church of Saint Multosia, by whom it is said to have been erected in the fourteenth century as the conventual church of a monastery which she had founded, is a spacious cruciform structure, with a tower supporting a low spire. The arches are in the pointed style, and the aspect of the whole is venerable, but inelegant. Several of the ancestors of Lord de Clifford repose within the walls. The Roman Catholic chapel is very capacious, and the internal decorations are rich, and as a whole it ranks high as an ecclesiastical edifice.
A convent of the Sisters of Mercy, and a Carmelite friary are established here; the chapel of the latter order is a substantial stone building. Wednesday and Saturday are the chartered markets, but every day the town is supplied with abundance of all the necessities of life. Fairs, May 4th, September 4th, and November 21st. The town and borough of Kinsale (including Cove, 352) contained, in 1841, 7,270 inhabitants.

Cove, or Summercove, is a village, in the parish of Ringcurran, forming a portion of the borough of Kin-sale, beautifully situated on the banks of its harbour.
It consists of well-built houses, among which are neat villas and lodges, for the accommodation of visitors that frequent this part in considerable numbers during the bathing season—at some time during which an annual regatta is held. Above the village is the church of Ringcurran, a pleasing and picturesque object, and in the vicinity is the extensive garrison of Charlesfort.
Population, see Kinsale.

SCILLY is a village, likewise in the parish of Ring-curran, and in the borough of Kinsale, occupying the summit and acclivity of a gentle eminence, forming a peninsula, projecting into the harbour. Immediately above the village are the barracks of Kinsale. This place may be considered as a suburb to that town, so closely is it connected with it—indeed its population is returned therewith.
