Directory.

MIDDLETON, &c.

Munster.

BALLICK is a small village and hamlet in the parish of, and may, indeed, be deemed a suburb of Middleton, being not more than a quarter of a mile from that town.
It possesses a good quay, at which vessels of two hundred tons burthen can be moored close to and discharge their cargoes. There are large stores for iron, coal, culm, &c. Population returned with Middleton.

BALLINACURRA is a large village, in the borough and parish of Middleton, about one mile from that town, rendered important from its being a branch of Cork harbour, and the shipping port for Middleton. There are some very extensive corn and coal stores, among which are those of Mr. Hallaran, the largest in the south of Ireland, and who supplies the celebrated house of Messrs. Guinness and Co. Dublin. Population returned with Middleton.

POST OFFICE. Main street, Joseph Brabazon, Post Master.—Letters from DUBLIN, the NORTH OF IRELAND, ENGLAND, &c. arrive (from RATHCORMAC) every morning at nine, and are despatched thereto every evening at half-past five.—Letters from DUBLIN and the SOUTH OF IRELAND arrive (from WATERFORD) every evening at half-past six, and are despatched thereto every morning at half-past five.
Letters from CORK arrive every morning at half-past five and evening at six, and are despatched thereto every morning at ten and evening at half-past six.—The box closes one hour previous to the despatch of the mails.

MIDDLETON

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BAILICK AND BALLINACURRA.

MIDDLETON is a market and corporate town and parish, in the barony of Imokilly, county of Cork, 156 miles s.w. from Dublin, and 16½ E. from Cork; eligibly situated on the main road between the latter city and Waterford through Youghal, at the north-east angle of Cork harbour, and on the Anachora, or Middleton river, which is navigable for vessels of near three hundred tons burthen to Ballinacurra. The town consists chiefly of one long spacious street, intersected by a few smaller ones. The scenery in many parts is very beautiful, and the country around is in a high state of cultivation. The manufacture of fine woollen cloths, at one time, was carried on extensively, but has, for some years, been discontinued, and government afterwards purchased the premises for barracks. They were subsequently bought by Lord Middleton, and are now the property of Messrs. Murphy and Co. who have converted them into a distillery—perhaps the most extensive in the south of Ireland, being capable of producing three hundred thousand gallons of whisky annually. Until within these few years there were other distilleries in the town, besides some large breweries, at which time the duty realized by the revenue, in this department, from Middleton, amounted to £100,000. annually. In consequence, however, of the happy progress of temperance, or some other cause, there exists no longer any breweries here, and but the one distillery above referred to.
The trade in corn is important, and the stores of Messrs.
Coppinger Brothers, and the flour mills of Mr. Allen, are of considerable magnitude; the latter sending into the market three thousand bags of flour annually.
Middleton has been improving for some time; it supports a branch of the National Bank of Ireland, and promises to occupy an important position on the new line of railway. The town received a charter of incorporation from Charles II, under which it returned two members to the Irish parliament until the Union, when it was disfranchised. The general quarter sessions for the East Riding of the county are held here in June and November, and petty sessions once a fortnight. Lord Middleton is patron of the town and lord of the manor, and is entitled to hold a court of record, by his senes-chal, every three weeks, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £200. Irish currency, but no court has been held for several years. The court-house is a small neat structure, with a bridewell attached.

The parish church of Saint John, re-erected in 1823, is a neat stone structure in the later English style. The glebe-house a spacious and handsome residence, is pleasantly situated. The other places of worship are two Roman Catholic chapels—that at the eastern extremity of the town is a spacious edifice; the other, a smaller one, is situated at Ballintoreitis. The convent of the Presentation is a handsome building, consisting of a centre and two wings, one of which forms the domestic chapel, the other a spacio school-room, in which five hundred children of the poor receive, from the ladies of the convent, a gratuitous education. In 1709 a college was founded here by the then Lady Elizabeth Villiers, in which some of the most shining characters in the kingdom received their early education—amongst these John Philpot Curran; the establishment has since fallen to decay. A branch of the Royal Agricultural Society is established here, to which is attached a library, containing many important and standard works upon agriculture; a sum of more than £120. is awarded annually to various competitors, and from its last report, the society appears to be in a thriving condition. The union workhouse is a large handsome building, standing upon an area of seven acres, the gift of Lord Middleton; it is capable of holding eight hundred poor. The market-house is a spacious building; the upper apartments are appropriated to the use of the town authorities and occasional assemblies. The public charities comprise a fever hospital and dispensary and two schools, one of which is under the care of the rector of the parish. The market, which is a very considerable one, is held on Saturday.
Fairs February 14th, May 14th, July 5th, September 10th, October 10th, and November 22nd. The parish of Middleton contained, in 1841, 6,636 inhabitants, and the town 4,591 of that number.
