DUNGANNON,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF COAL ISLAND, DONAGHMORE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNGANNON is a market town and parliamentary borough, in the parish of Drumglass, barony of Dungannon, county of Tyrone, 94 miles N. by W. from Dublin, 43 W. by S. from Belfast, 26 E. by S. from Omagh, 7 1/2 S. S. W. from Stewartstown, 6 N. W. from Moy, and somewhat more than the latter distance from Lough Neagh. It is eligibly situated on the great thoroughfare northward through Armagh, to Coleraine, Londonderry, &c.; at the eastern base of a great expanse of hill country, and environed with a fertile, well cultivated, and densely populated district. On the summit of a contiguous hill formerly stood a castle, erected by the O'Neills, chiefs of Ulster, and which was surrendered to Gerard, ninth Earl of Kildare, and by him condemned to the flames. A modern handsome building, erected in 1790, occupies the site of the castle, and commands an extensive prospect of the surrounding country. Adjoining the town, on its eastern side, is Northland House, the fine seat of the Earl of Ranfurly, the proprietor of the town. Dungannon consists of a square and four principal streets, with several smaller ones. Improvements, upon an extensive scale, have been made within these few years; handsome houses having been built within and around the town, which is gas lighted, and several eligible lines of road constructed; taken altogether Dungannon is respectable in its aspect, flourishing in its business, and its inhabitants are intelligent and courteous. The trade in linen and in grain is, perhaps, the most important here, but other considerable branches occupy attention. There are large dye and bleach works; the leather trade is of some importance, and earthenware, bricks, tiles, and paper, are manufactured in the vicinity. The merchants embarked in the grain, flax, and coal trades are many and respectable, and there are several corn mills actively at work. Drumglass collieries, rather more than a mile from the town, on the north side, are very extensive; they are wrought by the London Hibernian Company; for a long time their exertions proved comparatively fruitless, they have, however, lately been successful. The banking establishments comprise branches of the Belfast Banking Company, of the Provincial Bank of Ireland, and a bank for savings. The principal inns are two of the same sign—the Ranfurly Arms—both reputable and well conducted—that of which Mrs. Hughes is the proprietress is the senior house. James I. granted letters patent to the Chichester family, conferring upon them the manor of Dungannon, with many privileges. Immediately after this the town appears to have increased in trade and population, and, in consequence of the loyalty of the inhabitants, Dungannon was erected into a borough, to be governed by a provost and twelve burgesses, with the privilege of sending two representatives to the Irish Parliament. The corporation became extinct by the operation of the Municipal Act, and the borough now returns one member to the Imperial Parliament; Viscount Thomas Northland, eldest son of the Earl of Ranfurly, is the present representative. Dungannon confers the title of Viscount on the family of Trevor, of Brynkinalt, near Chirk, in the county of Denbigh, North Wales. Courts of quarter and petty sessions are regularly held, and a manor court is presided over by Robert Wray, Esq. J. P. the seneschal, every three weeks, which has jurisdiction to the amount of £20. Irish. A new court house has been erected, at the back of which is a bridewell, in which, besides the cells for criminals, there is separate accommodation for debtors. The original parish church of Drumglass was destroyed in the commotions during the reign of Elizabeth, and a new one erected by Sir Arthur Chichester, in the town of Dungannon, in 1619. This building shared the fate of its predecessor in 1641, was restored in 1672, and rebuilt in 1799, since which time it has been considerably enlarged and improved: as it now stands it is a handsome edifice, with a good tower and well-proportioned spire; the interior is neat, and furnished with a good organ, and the tower with a clock. The other places of worship are for Roman Catholics, Presbyterians (who have two meeting-houses), and Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, who have a chapel each. The principal charities consist of free schools, by which the children of the poor are benefited; a fever hospital, a dispensary, and a union workhouse; the last-named, which is pleasantly situated about a quarter of a mile from the town, is calculated for the reception of one hundred poor. The College, or 'Royal School of Dungannon,' was founded in 1628, and largely endowed. The present building, which was erected in 1786, by Primate Robinson, is situated on a gentle eminence, on the east side of the town, and comprises a centre and two deeply receding wings, erected at an expense of upwards of £4,500., of which a large sum was contributed by the primate, who also gave the ground upon which it is built. The circle of education at this celebrated establishment, besides the ordinary departments, includes the acquirement of the Latin, Greek, French, and Hebrew languages, together with geography, history, antiquities, logic, mathematics, and natural history. Medals are awarded to those pupils excelling in the classics and sciences, besides premiums given by the Earl of Ranfurly to others. The present learned principal is the Rev. John R. Darley, a gentleman in every respect qualified for the direction of this important educational establishment. A news room, with a library, is well supported, and a great acquisition to the town; the books, which form an admirable selection, were the gift of Viscount Northland, M.P. for the borough—a portrait of his lordship adorns the reading room. The market days are Monday and Thursday, the first for corn, the other for the usual commodities. Fairs the first Thursday in every month. The parish of Drumglass contained, in 1841, 6,809 inhabitants, and the town and borough of Dungannon 3,801 of that number.

COAL ISLAND is a post village, partly in the parishes of Donoghery and Clonoe, but chiefly in that of Tollynisk, barony of Dungannon, four miles north-east from that town, on the road from Armagh to Stewartstown. This flourishing little village is situated in the centre of the Tyrone coal-field, and is benefited in its mining operations by facility of canal communication with Lough Neagh and the Blackwater river. In the village are iron-works, where spades and shovels are manufactured, as are fire-bricks in the vicinity, and there is a flax mill in full operation, and a prolific coal mine, in which many persons find employment. Three parish churches are situated within as many miles; and a chapel of ease, and a Roman Catholic chapel, are in the village—which contained, in 1841, 451 inhabitants.

DONAGHMORE, or Doonamor, a small village in the parish of its name, barony of Dungannon, is between 2 and 3 miles from that town, on the road to Omagh. This neat and thriving little place derives its name from Donnagh-mor, 'the great fortress,' and was an important military station in the wars of Ireland, particularly during the rebellion of the O'Neills and the O'Donnells. Saint Patrick founded an abbey here, which flourished till after the conquest of Ireland by Henry II. No vestiges remain of the building—unless that a large stone cross, which stands in the village, and is inscribed with numerous hieroglyphics, formed a portion of the ecclesiastical decorations. An extensive brewery, belonging to Messrs. Mackenzie and Co. is in the village. The parish church, situated at Castle-Caulfield, is a huge plain edifice. A chapel of ease, a Roman Catholic chapel, and one for Independents, are in the village. A fair is held on the first Tuesday monthly. Population of the village 542.
