

LISNASKEA, MAGUIRE'S BRIDGE & BROOKEBOROUGH.

LISNASKEA is a small market town, in the parish of Aghalurcher, barony of Magherastephana, county of Fermanagh, 89 miles N. N. W. from Dublin, 20 N. by W. from Cavan, 11 S. E. from Enniskillen, 6½ N. S. W. from Newtown-Butler, and about the same distance south from Five-mile Town; situated on the road leading to Enniskillen, Cavan, and Dublin. This town, which is the property of the Earl of Erne, consists principally of one street, the houses of which are, for the most part, well built and roof-slatted. The proprietor has made considerable improvements in the town: among these a good market-house is a conspicuous and useful building; while in the centre of the town, and an ornament to that part, stands a handsome stone structure, erected by the earl, for a museum or collection of agricultural implements upon the most approved principle, for the inspection of, and patterns for his tenantry. Lisnaskea is but little, if at all, interested in manufactures; its corn trade is good, and that of a general character has decidedly improved lately; its markets and fairs are well attended, and the place enjoys some facilities of communication from being only about two miles and a half from Upper Lough Erne. The principal inn, a very comfortable house, is Armstrong's Hotel.

The places of worship are a chapel of ease to the parish, and one each for Roman Catholics and Methodists; and the benevolent institutions are a union work-house, a fever hospital, and a dispensary. The market is held on Saturday, and the fairs on the Monday next before Easter Sunday, the Monday after Ascension day, and October 10th. The town contained, in 1841, 915 inhabitants.

MAGUIRE'S BRIDGE is another small market town, in the same parish and barony as Lisnaskea, about three miles W. by N. from it; situated at the eastern verge of the parish, on the road from Enniskillen to Clones, and on the banks of the Colebrook river. In former times, a Maguire, one of the princes of Ulster, swayed a large district in this part of Ireland, and from this personage, and the bridge by which the river is crossed, the place derives its name. The town presents a clean and comparatively neat appearance, and the country round, which is fertile, produces good crops of grain. There are several seats of the landed gentry in the neighbourhood—that of Sir Arthur Brooke, on the Clogher road, is a very elegant residence. The business of the place is mainly confined to retail shops, which supply the inhabitants, and those of the immediate vicinity, with the usual articles of consumption and wear. A very good inn, the 'Hayward Arms,' is the only prominent trade establishment.

The places of worship are the parish chapel of ease; a handsome Catholic chapel of hewn stone; a Presbyterian meeting-house, and a Methodist chapel. A branch of the Lisnaskea dispensary is established here, and there is a loan fund. The market, entitled to be held on Wednesday, and formerly a good one for corn, has all but, if not entirely, fallen into disuse; but fairs continue to be held on the first Wednesday monthly. The town contained, in 1841, 685 inhabitants.

BROOKEBOROUGH is a post village, in the parish of Aghavea, same barony as the previously described places, about five miles S. E. by N. from Lisnaskea, on the road to Five-mile Town and Clogher. One short street comprises the village, the houses of which are neat and well roofed. There is little or no trade belonging to the place, but what is induced by its fairs, which are held on the third Tuesday monthly; and for the interchange of commodities with those attending them there are several good shops. The only public establishments are a dispensary and stations of the revenue and constabulary police. Divine service of the established church is performed, every Sunday, in a parochial school room; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village contained, in 1841, 491 inhabitants.
