

ary. There is a parochial school, and laudable efforts are making for the establishment of a national school, which is much needed. There is also an excellent mathematical and engineering academy, conducted by Mr. Fox, civil engineer. The scientific instruments of this academy have cost upwards of £250, and it can boast of having produced some of the most distinguished mathematicians and engineers of the day. The following are the bearings of Mr. Fox's observatory:—Latitude north, 53 deg. 40 min. 20 sec.; longitude west, 7 deg. 18 min. 30 sec.; elevation above the sea, 298 feet.

CELBRIDGE, LEIXLIP, LUCAN AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CELBRIDGE is a small market town, partly in the parish of Dunacomber, barony of South Salt, but chiefly in the parish of Celbridge, barony of North Salt, county of Kildare, 12½ miles W. by S. from Dublin, and 12 S. from Naas; seated on the banks of the river Liffey, over which is a handsome stone bridge of six arches. The town consists principally of one street, at the extremity of which stands the church. The woollen and cotton manufactures are extensively carried on here, and afford employment to a large number of the industrious class.

The places of worship are the established church, and a Roman Catholic chapel, the former a neat modern stone building, with a good tower and painted window. A fever hospital, and a dispensary, as well as a Sunday and day school, supported by subscription, also a savings bank, are well sustained here; and, in 1841, a new union workhouse was erected. Lyons, the magnificent seat of Lord Cloncurry, within a short walk of the town, is well worth the attention of the visitor; and at Castle Town, not far distant, stands the beautiful mansion and residence of Colonel Conolly. Near to the town is Celbridge Abbey, a favourite retreat of Dean Swift's, and the residence of the lady celebrated in his poem of Cadmus and Vanessa. The market is held on Saturday; and fairs on the last Tuesday in April, September 6th, and November 7th. Population, in 1841, 1,289.

LEIXLIP is a small market town and parish, in the same county as Celbridge, three miles therefrom, and like that town situated near the Liffey, where a famous salmon-leaf and waterfall are annually visited by great numbers of tourists. From the Dublin road a most delightful view is presented of the town, the Liffey and Rhy, the former being nearly surrounded by the two streams, which unite at the foot of Leixlip Castle. This edifice stands on a commanding eminence, majestically soaring above the town; it is the property of Colonel Conolly, but the residence of the Hon. Geo. Cavendish, who has modernized and greatly beautified it.

The places of worship are the established church and a Roman Catholic chapel, the latter a neat ornamental building, and very pleasantly situated. There are schools in connection with the board of education, and a public infants' school. The market day is Saturday, and the fairs May 4th and October 9th. The population, in 1841, was 1,086.

LUCAN is a village and parish, in the barony of Newcastle, county of Dublin, about 4½ miles N.E. from Celbridge, situated on the high road to Dublin and Galway, on the right bank of the Liffey, which is crossed by a neat stone bridge. The place is chiefly noticed for its chalybeate spa, efficacious in the cure of cutaneous complaints, and is resorted to, in the summer season, by many. A handsome spa-house has been erected, consisting of a centre and two wings, in one of which is an assembly-room, where concerts and balls are given. The magistrates sit in petty sessions here every Tuesday. Lucan gives the title of baron and earl to the noble family of Bingham. An extensive iron foundry here furnishes employment to many of the working inhabitants.

The parish church, erected in 1822, is a neat building with a spire. A Roman Catholic chapel and a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists, are the other religious edifices; and a dispensary, a savings' bank, and a school for the sons of the Irish clergy, comprise the other public buildings. Population, in 1841, 663.
