TULLAMORE.

OR TULLAMORE, the latter appellation said to be derived from the moor on which it stands, is the county and assize town of King's county and a parish, in the barony of Ballycowan, 57 miles W. by S. from Dublin, 23 S. E. by E. from Athlone, 124 N. E. from Ballyboy, 10 west from Philipstown, and six south from Kibbegan. The Grand Canal passes the end of the town, affording water communication with Dublin and Shannon harbour; and the small river Clodagh (a branch of the Brosna) runs through, and is crossed by a neat bridge. The town is arranged in the form of a cross, and the houses being white, and the streets wide, it is in appearance airy and cleanly. The surrounding country is level, and the bogs are numerous, causing turf to be cheap, and giving employment to great numbers of persons in procuring and bringing it to market. The public structures, besides the places of worship and school are a gaol and admirably constructed gaol, with a grass court-house, a county infirmary, union workhouse, market house, barracks, and a convent. The assizes, having been removed from Philipstown, are now held here, and petty sessions every Saturday. The municipal government is vested in a seneschal and the local magistrates. The head quarters of the constabulary force is in this town, which is the residence of the county inspector. The principal business establishments are two breweries, the same number of tanneries, a distillery, a branch of the bank of Ireland, and four hotels.

The parish church of Saint Catherine, which stands about a quarter of a mile from the town upon a lofty sandy hill, is a neat building, with a handsome pinnacled tower, conspicuous for a considerable distance round; and several finely sculptured memorials of the Charleville family adorn the interior. The Catholic chapel is a handsome building in the modern style of architecture, with two pinnacled towers at the east end; and the Methodist chapels, of which there are two, are neat structures. To the latter places of worship Sunday schools are attached; and there is a valuable school, founded by Earl Charleville, for the education of an unlimited number of children of both sexes; a national school, the female branch of which is under the tuition of the Sisters of Mercy; and a free school, supported by the Baptist Irish Society of London, wherein public worship is held every fortnight, are the other public educational establishments. A savings' bank and a loan fund dispense their respective benefits here. About a quarter of a mile distant, on the banks of the canal, and near the old road leading from Dublin to Galway, are the ruins of Stragh Castle, built in 1588, by John Roscoe, Esq. of Crofton Hall, in Cumberland, an officer of high rank in Queen Elizabeth's army, and by his wife Eleanor Kerny, and their son Andrew Briscoe, Esq., as recorded upon a tablet in the church. Within a mile of the town is the beautiful demesne of the Earl of Charleville, to whom the town is greatly indebted for its improvement. The delightfully-wooded park, with its grottoes, rustic bridges, artificial caverns, cascades, and lakes, constitute the demesne a terrestrial paradise. The market days are on Tuesday and Saturday. Fairs, March 19th, May 10th, July 10th, October 21st, and Dec. 13th. The parish contained, in 1841, 9,668 inhabitants, and the town 6,343 of that number.

POST OFFICE, William street, John Alexander Bradley, Post Master.—Letters from DUBLIN and the NORTH arrive every morning at half-past five, and are despatched every evening at half-past seven.—Letters from PARSONSTOWN, MOUNTNELICK, and the SOUTH and WEST arrive every evening at seven, and are despatched every morning at six.
